Legacy Mount Hood Medical Center – Cancer Services

NEW DATE – Friday, May 12, 2017

Coping with cancer

“It felt like a bomb hit,” says Julianna Paradisi when she heard those dreaded words, “You have cancer.” Right now, there are more than 15.5 million Americans living with cancer. The American Cancer Society predicts that number will reach 20 million in the next 10 years.

More people are surviving cancer thanks to improvements in early detection and treatment, but it comes at high prices. Many cancer survivors and their families cope with the long-term financial, physical and psychological effects of cancer treatment. “To have someone who can connect you to resources when you’re having trouble paying bills or affording medications, someone who will answer questions and who you can talk to about being afraid – it’s provides peace of mind,” says Paradisi.

Healing the mind, spirit and body

Because a cancer diagnosis can be overwhelming, confusing and frightening, Legacy Mount Hood’s cancer services are designed to support patients, both physically and emotionally, during their entire healing journey. Our patients receive the entire spectrum of cancer care, from screening and diagnosis to treatment and recovery support.

Legacy continues to implement medical advances and cutting-edge technology that saves lives. Mount Hood’s Breast Health Center has reduced-radiation 3-D mammography, which detects cancer earlier when treatment is most successful. We are also playing an active role in community education by providing convenient access to preventative colon cancer screenings.

With generous philanthropic support, we can continue to provide seamless, high-quality cancer care for the East County community. “Legacy Mount Hood is opening doors for people who might not be able to receive care,” says Paradisi.
